Pte F Alexander and Pte E Young (now Sullivan) 618(H) H.A.A. Battery – Black Rock Brighton 1944

Description of daily tasks:	 Barrack Beds: stacking 'biscuit' mattress, sheets folded round neatly in blankets. Reveille at 6.00 am If not on duty, taking P.E. and possibly lectures Tidying hut Telephonist duties in 'dugout' Command Post
Pay book:	Not available. Paybook was a very important book, everything was entered – pay, leave, inoculations, exam results from Signal School etc
Memorable moments:	 Fun evenings in the NAAFI when not on duty. We made our own fun with impromptu dances, a dartboard and cards (no gambling allowed). Being at Camp Nelson at Fareham on D Day and looking down on Portsmouth Harbour, watching the activity and expecting lots of German planes to come over, we were all keyed up for action, but none came. We were at Black Rock, Brighton at the time of the V Rockets – the war in Germany ended whilst we were there. At the end of the German War A.A. was disbanded and there was anxiety about where we would be posted and the loss of our friends. I was posted to Ilfracombe RA.P.C. to do P.O.W. accounts and fortunately, we telephonists were mostly together still. Life was very different in the Royal Army Pay Corps. We were billeted and worked in the many Hotels in Ilfracombe, but, of course, not 4 star, just the bare essentials. No parades, except Church Parade about once a month. We had 'Office hours' and had to take various trade examinations. The work was most interesting, at first I was doing the pensions for the Chelsea Pensioners but as soon as the P.O.W.s were being released and returning home, we were preparing their accounts. Some had a lot of money to return to, as they had been P.O.W.s for a long time. We also changed money – Deutschmarks and Yen. Our section had wonderful walks across the Tors, beautiful countryside. The Japanese War ending and all the celebrating along Ilfracombe see front and Harbour – wonderful.
