before eating breakfast. (Memories of baked beans on fatty fried bread; over-roasted potatoes; trifle made with currant bread).

- Winchester was surrounded by army and Fleet Air Arm camps. American forces stationed in large houses at Nether Wallop, Middle Wallop, Stockbridge etc. would send 5-ton trucks to collect girls for their dances and then bring them back. For dances at Southampton Y.M.C.A. we would hitch a lift on the main road and return by train.
- In late 1946 I was posted to Polish Resettlement Corps at Milford, near Guildford, ostensibly to assist in setting up a Records Office for them. I was promoted to sergeant for this move and stayed there till demobilisation in 1947.
- I was demobilised at Aldershot and was allowed to travel in my greatcoat which, if I did not wish to keep, I could hand in at the nearest railway station and receive £1.10s. for it.
- Before demobilisation the army did make some effort to prepare us for civilian life and I attended a course for assistant hotel management which led to a short career in that line.
